Brief
Re: Julie Hamstead v Former Trooper D.R. Walker

My name is Conor McCourt. I am a professionally trained, court certified and experienced Forensic Video Analyst and New York State licensed Private Investigator. I am the owner of McCourt Video Analysis and Investigations Inc. I have attached my CV for review.

I have prepared the following forensic video brief with images in a word format. Images contained in the report are for reference only. This report will be saved as a PDF for review.

I was contacted by Attorney Braun Hamstead on May 30th, 2019 to examine, review and forensically analyze digital video images of an incident that had occurred on April 25, 2016 in the American Public University System Parking Lot in West Virginia. I was asked to compare the videos provided to me by APUS and attorney Braun Hamstead.

I used a forensic video software tool called INPUTACE to properly examine the video in question.

I was asked to answer the following:

- 1) Is the video footage on the flash drive which Attorney Braun Hamstead sent to me on May 30th, 2019 the exact same video footage, a true replica, subsequently provided to you directly by American Public University?
- 2) Are the date and times displayed in all the visual time stamps in the video submitted concurrent? Are the relative times depicted on the video footage accurate?
- 3) Do data markers exist on the footage provided by APUS which indicate the date/time this data was manipulated or saved indicated? If so, could you please give the dates/times of such event, when footage was modified and/or saved for each of the three portions of video footage which APUS provided?

As to question one. I digitally examined the three files submitted by Mr Braun to me and the three files submitted to me by APUS and they are digital duplicates, and are exactly the same.

As to question two, the submitted videos are from the same system and have the same time stamp configuration. A time stamp displayed on one camera view would represent same on the time on the other. So if one view displayed 16:17:43 the other view would display 16:17:43 as well, if it was the same actual time. The accuracy of the time is not verified but the displayed time would be concurrent and reflect the "same real world point in time" in both views.

Additionally, the elapsed time on the video matches the elapsed time recorded by the timestamp in all the files. So, if 10 minutes elapsed according to the playback timeline of the video, the timestamp would reflect that same time period as well. There is no indication of gaps in the time sequence. The time indicates that if for example ten minutes has elapsed according to the time stamp, then ten minutes has elapsed in the real world. This is regardless of the actual accuracy of the time stamp in it's relationship with the actual time zone its recorded in.

As to question three, metadata indicates that the first two files were modified and/or downloaded on 5/6/2016. The third file listed was modified and/or downloaded on 5/2/2016.
